

Reasonable Teaching: The 13x4 to master “the Art of Teaching”. Master the art of teaching by focusing on just one thing at a time, using an adapted 13x4 method for education – the 9x4 (e-lecture in English)

Description

This course is a framework for developing the characteristics of exceptional teaching, through focusing on one thing at a time, using a customised version of the 13x4 method for education, the 9x4.

It's part of Tom Cassidy's Reason-Ability series. There are 9 broad characteristics of exceptional teaching, each representing either something teachers believe or something they do. In order to develop these characteristics, you concentrate on just one aspect at a time, on a weekly basis until you have covered all 9. This takes 9 weeks. At that point, you repeat the cycle and continue to repeat it until you have completed the cycle 4 times.

The idea of 'One thing at a time' as a developmental tool is not new. It was first turned into a system by Benjamin Franklin who used it to master the skills he required to develop his character.
